MRS. FREAR TO LECTURE

The Junior Rambling Club Will Make an Excursion to the Palo Valley.

The members of the Young Women's Christian Association reading circle met last Tuesday evening at the association rooms for the purpose of formulating plans for the ensuing season. The meeting was a very enthusiastic one, and three courses of study were discussed, Tennyson, modern novels, and a travel club. The latter was finally decided upon, and the organization will in future be styled the Young Women's Christian Association Travel Club. The subject will be "Holland." Fourteen programs have been arranged, and the course will extend over three months. The club will meet on Tuesday evenings at 7:30 o'clock in the association rooms. Miss S. Clark, Mrs. E. Phillips and Mrs. H. E. Coleman were appointed a committee to superintend the study.

Mrs. W. F. Frear will shortly deliver a series of lectures on Tennyson, under the auspices of the Young Women's Christian Association. The lectures will commence at the end of October, and will be continued on an appointed morning of each succeeding week at the association rooms. Mrs. Frear's lectures on Browning, which she delivered last year, will be recalled with genuine pleasure by all fortunate to attend them.

The Young Men's Christian Association Junior Rambling Club will make an excursion to Palolo Valley next Saturday. The expedition will start from the rooms at 8 a. m., returning to town about 5 p. m. The young men will go on horseback or on bicycles as far as the foot of the hill which divides the valley. From thence to the crater on the mountain the journey will be made on foot. The climb is a long, hard one, but is being looked forward to with great keenness by the intending participants on account of the notoriety given the vicinity by recent mysterious deaths.

THE BALLOON DID NOT RISE

The Various Reasons for the Trouble With Wireless
Telegraph System.

An attempt was made last evening to raise the balloon which the Wireless Telegraph Company has had made to catch the electrical impulses from the stations on the other Islands. It proved unsuccessful "owing to the high wind," so Manager Cross stated last evening. Nor was the night dark enough.

Leading scientists are much at odds as to the real reasons for the failure of the telegraph system to do its work properly. Some assert that it is because of the failure of the thermometrical waves to adjust themselves properly to the centrifugal motion of the earth. They assert that the polar attraction of the mountains in the vicinity of the stations is so great that electrical current deviates and fails to enter the induction coils in sufficient quantities to cause the detonators to vibrate. This of course results in an unintelligible series of disconnected dots and dashes which the operators at the receiving end are unable to interpret. To remedy this the experts hope to send up a balloon wherein they will place a receiving wire. When they get it up high enough the influence of the mountains will be dispelled and the dynamic energy transmitted through the air by the so-called Hertzian waves will be caught on the fly and impaling itself on the sharpened point of the wire will be forced to wriggle down to the instrument below. Once captured and caged, the experts will turn on it a cathode ray and having ascertained its internal economy thereby to see that it has brought along no plague bacilli (for as it arrives at the Island without being first examined by Dr. Carmichael it is liable to bring along almost any old disease). It will be switched through a wet rag onto the positive pole of the instrument, and thence through seven induction coils and one deduction coil. These being thus magnetized will set up vibrations in the detonators and all will be well, providing the gliderfluke acts.

There are still others who believe that if a large seine were suspended from the balloon it would prove much more efficacious in catching the impulses than the sharpened wire. These gentlemen contend that it will require an expert of considerable skill with the lance to spear the messages as they come by. And moreover it will cost the company a small fortune to pay the salary of the man in the balloon for, as it would be a position of some danger, he would naturally require a big salary to compensate him for the risk. And too in the excess of his zeal and the excitement of the chase he might fall out as he reached after some more than usually agile message and then there would be damage suits and widow's pensions to pay. If the seine were used, the message might be beguiled into it by some bait which a study of its habits would suggest and all would be easy after that.

With all this disagreement among the savants it is not surprising that, as yet, the wireless telegraph system has not proven successful, but if Manager Cross and his group of scientists, imported all the way from England, cannot solve it no one can, so all the public can do is wait and trust, and when communication is established at last, to make no kick even if the heavens are filled with bulgy balloons or overspread with nets.
